Our Story

"There is potential to create a world where women and girls can enjoy their right to live free of violence." UN Women-Africa

The rising cases of Violence Against Women and Girls (VAWG) in Kenya, with the most brutal form being femicide, are fueled by societal tolerance of these violations. Inadequate action from law enforcement institutions further enables this societal tolerance. According to the Kenya Demographic and Health Survey (KDHS) 2022, over 40% of women have experienced physical or sexual violence in their lives, highlighting how deeply entrenched and systemic this issue is.

As civil society, we play a critical role in raising public awareness and holding both state and non-state institutions accountable for fulfilling their responsibilities and honoring commitments to end VAWG.
